INTRODUCTION

Oak Bluff Memorial Park Cemetery, located at the end of Block Street, Port Neches, Texas was originally the Block Family¹ cemetery.

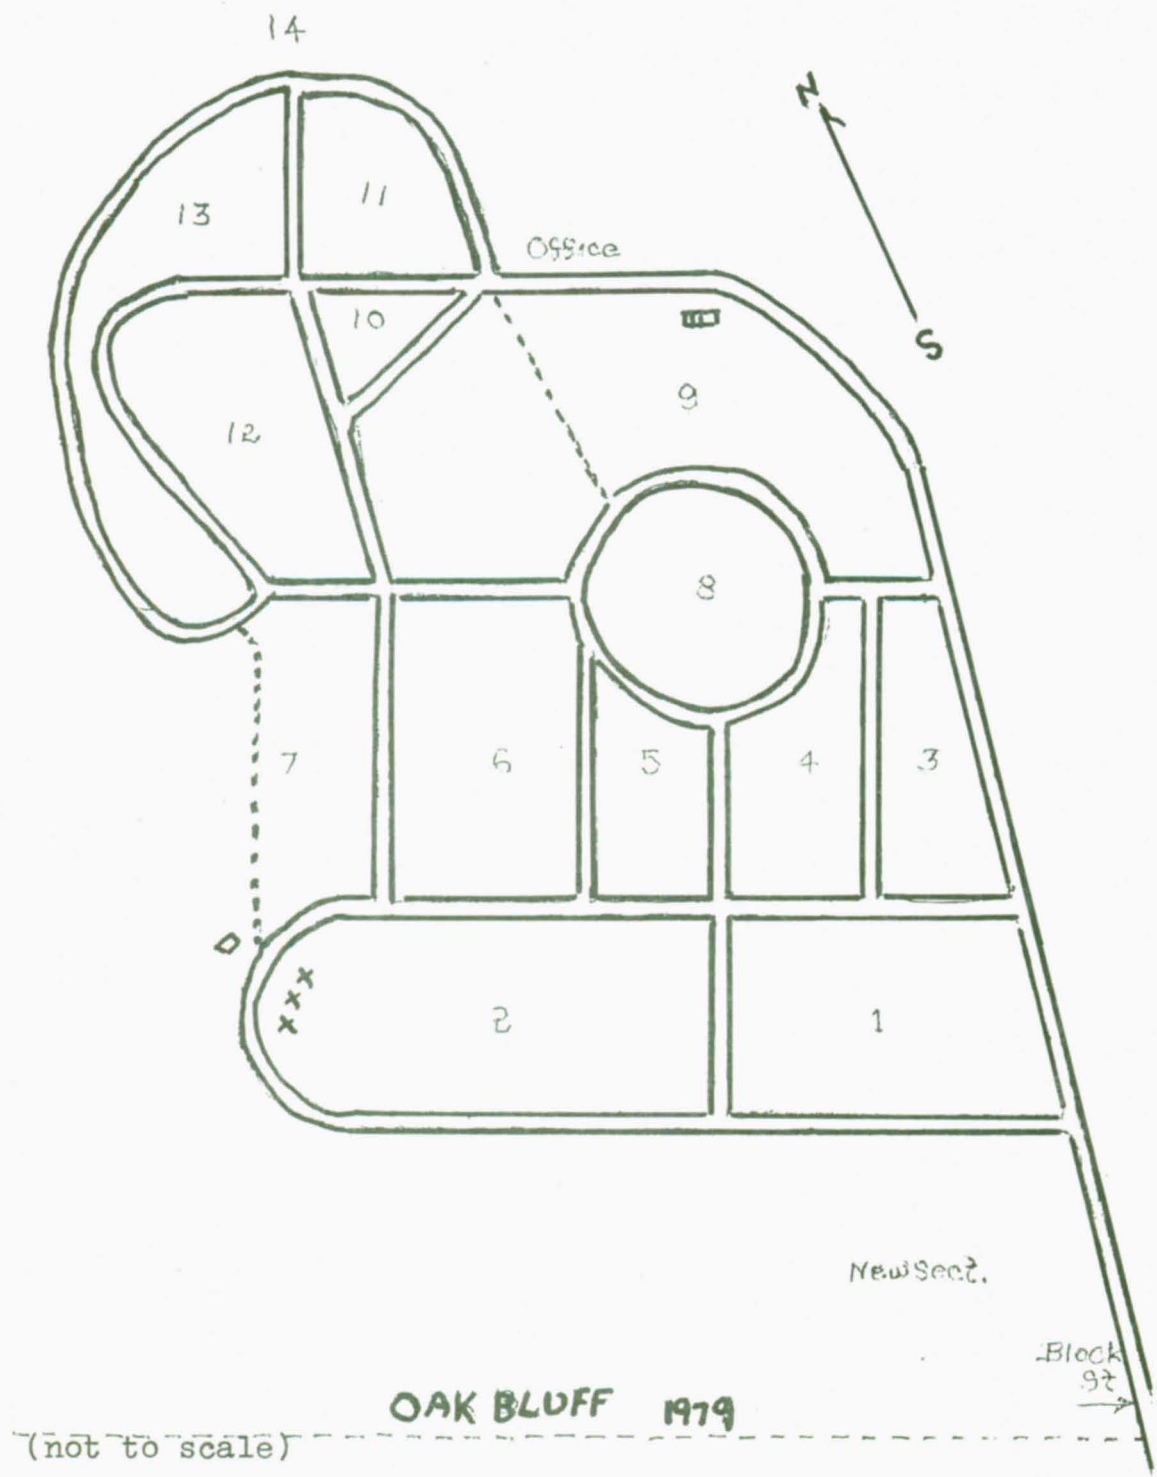

One of the early settlers of Jefferson County was Joseph Grigsby, who settled at Grigsby's Bluff² on the west bank of the Neches River about 1834, and reputedly was the first to raise cotton in the county. Joseph Grigsby died about 1842³ and was buried on his plantation, the site having been designated to the compiler as being south of the Port Neches Park, now Texaco property. His daughter, Matilda,⁴ was also buried on the plantation.

Writing in 1905, Mr. Russell identified Grigsby's Bluff for newcomers as Port Neches and being "at the point in going down the river where you first strike the Lake Marsh."⁵

Research by the staff of the Port Neches Library revealed the town was founded by the Guffey Petroleum Company in 1901, and after several sales, purchased by the Texaco Comapny in 1906.⁶ It was incorporated in 1927. In 1940 it had a population of 2,487; and in 1850, 5,447. The TEXAS ALMANAC of the Dallas-Morning News, 1978-79 edition, gives a population of 12,673. The economy is based on the petroleum industry.

Texas Historical Commission marker:

"Tex Ritter Jan. 12, 1905 Jan. 2, 1974 Western Singing Star Woodward Maurice 'Tex' Ritter was born in Panola County, Texas. After attending college he began singing Cowboy Ballads on a Houston Radio Station in 1928. He advanced to Broadway where he was nicknamed 'Tex' and in 1936 began a series of popular western movies. Ritter performed later for television and the Gran Old Opry and was named to the Music Hall of Fame. His best known recording is the title song from the film 'High Noon' recorded 1976" for burial site: Section 7, page 58
