

CHAIRMAN'S LETTER

Dear Members,

Railroads have been a driving force in the economic development of this county since the 1800's. An 1862 map of Jefferson County shows the Texas and New Orleans Railroad passing through the Noah Tevis survey on its way across the Neches River.

The current Kansas City Southern Railroad lift bridge across the Neches was built in 1941 and estimates of costs to add another track range from 120 to 240 million dollars depending on the site location and height of the crossing.

Thank you to our members for your time and service in preserving our history.

JCHC TIDBITS

- THC has notified the JCHC that the marker application and all required materials have been received from St. Paul United Methodist Church in Port Arthur. They will be contacting us soon to notify the church for the $100 application fee, due by December 11, 2015.
- Paul Prosperie, Don Smart and Bruce Hamilton attended the Liberty County Cemetery Workshop on Saturday, September 26, 2015.
- Linda McMahan, Ramon Hutchinson and Ron Ellington attended the East Texas Historical Association Fall Meeting October 8 – 10, 2015 at Stephen F. Austin University in Nacogdoches. They attended the Black History Breakfast and a session on Reclaiming Cherokee County Cemeteries. This included information on the characteristics and traditions of maintaining historic cemeteries and efforts of locating lost cemeteries. They also learned about the Texas African American Historical Cemetery Preservation Society. This is an association that does research and records Texas African American Cemetery History. The JCHC has recently applied for membership in this organization.

SEVEN WAYS HISTORIC PRESERVATION MAKES A BIG ECONOMIC IMPACT IN TEXAS

AUSTIN, Texas —A recent University of Texas and Rutgers University economic impact study (PDF) revealed some surprising facts about the significant benefits of historic preservation efforts in the Lone Star State.

The study contained seven key conclusions:

1. Tourists love historic districts and preserved or restored sites. More than 10 percent of Texas travel is heritage related, with $2.26 billion in annual visitor spending related to history-based tourism.
2. Historic preservation supports tens of thousands of Texas jobs. Heritage tourism supports 54,000 jobs in Texas; historic preservation supports 79,000 jobs (2013 numbers).
3. Historic building rehabilitation rebuilds communities. Private and public institutions in Texas invest a total of $772 million in historic preservation projects, making a significant economic impact in communities across Texas.
4. Historic county courthouses make great economic sense. Since 2000, $251 million in grants across 91 counties through the Texas Historic Courthouse Preservation Program has created 9,600 jobs and added $651 million in state gross domestic product. It has also revitalized downtown areas in large and small communities.
5. Texas Main Street communities make good business sense. Since 1981, participating cities in the Texas Main Street program have made an average annual contribution of $310 million to state GDP. Cumulative reinvestment in Main Street areas has totaled more than $5.2 billion since 1981. Currently, 89 cities participate in the program.
6. Historic properties attract significant reinvestment. Every dollar from federal and state incentive programs triggers $4–$5 of private sector investment, spurring $1.78 billion in private-sector rehabilitations, and creating 35,000 in-state jobs and more than $2.4 billion in Texas GDP.
7. 700 Texas history museums bring economic vitality to communities. Museum organizations in Texas spend $93 million annually, not including capital expenditures, and each attracts thousands of visitors every year.

MAGNOLIA CEMETERY TOUR

Paul Prosperie and Jimmy Sparks, arranged a walking/driving tour of Beaumont's historic Magnolia Cemetery on Monday, October 19, 2015. Some of the highlights of the tour included visiting the final resting place of over twenty of Beaumont's most prominent citizens.

Some of the graves have elaborate monuments such as that of Jeanette Caterina Stengele, a German native who became a naturalized U. S. citizen in 1898. Other notable citizens buried at Magnolia Cemetery are Florence Stratton, also known as Susie Spindletop, Beaumont news reporter; Confederate soldiers, James A. Tiner, George P. Abney and Lewis Andrew Smith; William E. Patterson, Deputy City Marshall killed by a gunshot inflicted by Pattillo Higgins of Spindletop fame, who was later acquitted; Ruth and Florence Chambers, who bequeathed their home to become the Chambers House Museum; and Robert Kidd, who lived to be 116, and is said to have farmed his land until nearly the age of 100.

Many thanks to Paul and Jimmy for the tour and the informative program.

NECHES RIVER BRIDGE STUDY

The Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) is proposing rail improvements for the Neches River Bridge in the City of Beaumont, Texas. The proposed project would improve rail operations through the Beaumont area by providing a second rail crossing of the Neches River. The project would support and enhance industrial facilities utilizing rail, marine and highway services in the Beaumont region.
